Ford and NTU Tie Up in VLC Project to Enhance Driving Safety

Compiled by QUINCY LIANG

With an eye on enhancing technological-innovation capability in Taiwan, Ford Lio Ho Motor Co., the local subsidiary of Ford Motor of the U.S., recently signed an agreement to cooperate with the Department of Computer Science and Information Engineering (CSIE) of the National Taiwan University (NTU) in a vehicular Visible Light Communication (VLC) development project, which aims to improve driving safety and upgrade road-utilization rate for improved vehicular energy-efficiency and lower costs on road infrastructure construction.

VLC is a fast-growing technology that enables free-space wireless communications using LEDs and photodiodes. Such system often adopts LEDs, decoders, application software, and optical sensors or cameras for vehicle-to-vehicle (V2V) communications. Compared to human vision or vehicular radar sensing, the transmission of driving information with the VLC system is more accurate and faster; while VLC system is more reliable compared to traditional wireless communications, such as WiFi, thanks to the very low interference.

With VLC system integrated into the Advanced Driving Assistant System (ADAS), Ford Lio Ho said, a vehicle can immediately react upon receiving information from other vehicles, making driving safer. When most vehicles on the road is equipped with the VLC, the required distance between vehicles can be shortened to raise overall road-loading capacity to also increase road utilization rate. In addition, the auto assembler said, when all vehicles on a road run at the same, safe average speed, the shorter distance between vehicles can effectively achieve lower wind resistance to enable "drafting" (when a car trails another car closely to take advantage of the relatively lower headwind) and achieve higher fuel efficiency for all vehicles.

CSIE pointed out that the VLC technology has been winning increasing attention from the automotive industry, but most existing VLC systems have to adopt expensive and special optical sensors or cameras. CSIE said that one of its R&D teams has developed a more affordable solution requiring only smartphone cameras. In addition, CSIE added, with many cars equipped with LED brake lights, a driver just need to download a smartphone app and put a smartphone in a designated location on a instrument panel to easily operate a VLC system.

Thomas Fann, president of Ford Lio Ho, pointed out that Ford has been devoted to creating safe driving features for a long period, and the company is the pioneer of many active and passive automotive safety systems in the industry. The cooperation with CSIE, he added, is expected to upgrade driving experience of Taiwanese drivers, also enable Taiwan participate in transportation solution development projects of the future. # Taiwan's New-car Sales in Oct. Rebound 27% MoM

A total of 31,956 new cars were sold in Taiwan in October, up 26.7 percent from the previous month, or month-on-month (MoM), but down 6.9 percent from a year earlier, or year-on-year (YoY).

Accumulated new-car sales volume in the first 10 months of 2015 reached 344,104 units, a 1.1 percent YoY drop, according to statistics compiled by the Ministry of Transportation and Communications (MOTC).

Various factors affected the overall market in October, especially that the Taiwan Cabinet reportedly plans to subsidize replacement purchases, with related details still under planning. The news mostly likely has delayed some new-car purchase decisions, pushing consumers to wait for further policy development. In addition, Volkswagen Group of Germany's emissions cheating scandal in September has prompted the Taiwan Environmental Protection Administration (EPA) to ask local agents to recall sold vehicles on the island. The issue might affect local consumers' willingness to buy new diesel-engine cars, industry sources said.

To cope with the wait-and-see mindset of potential new-car buyers, many local automobile vendors decided to offer unprecedented preferential terms and incentives to stimulate sales last month such as gifts of home appliances and optional equipment, leading to the 26.7 percent MoM growth in the overall market.

Hotai Motor Co. Ltd., the local agent of Toyota and Lexus, unsurprisingly, retained the No.1 auto vendor position in October by selling 8,780 new cars, up 62.8 percent MoM but down 24 percent YoY, representing a market share of 27.5 percent. Market observers attribute Hotai's relatively-low market share (typically over 30 percent) to a product vacuum period in October, as the new version, hot-selling Toyota RAV4 (imported) and restyled Lexus RX-series models (imported) will be introduced to local consumers in November.

China Motor Corp. (CMC), local assembler and agent of Mitsubishi and its own CMC lineup, sold 3,641 new cars in October, up 46.9 percent and 6.2 percent YoY. CMC, in fact, has been lacking sufficiently competitive passenger-car products for years for relying on its Japanese partner's product-development progress; but it launched the CMC Zinger commercial/recreational van in September to have won hot market response. CMC was the No. 2 auto vendor in October by winning a market share of 11.4 percent.

Yulon Nissan Motor Co., the local agent of Nissan and Infiniti, sold 2,838 new vehicles, up 24.5 percent MoM but down 12.8 percent YoY, translating into market share of 8.9 percent.

Trailing sub-200-unit in sales, Honda Taiwan Motor Co. ranked the No. 4 by selling 2,650 units in October, up 43.3 percent MoM for also an 8.1 percent YoY increase.

Mazda Taiwan ranks the No. 5 auto vendor in October by selling 2,155 new cars, of which the imported Mazda 3 subcompact and CX-5 SUV account for the majority. (photo of Mazda 3)

Having successful turned from vending locally-assembled models to imported ones, Mazda Taiwan became the No. 5 auto vendor by selling 2,155 new cars, of which the Mazda 3 subcompact and CX-5 sport utility vehicle (SUV) accounted for the greatest majority. The October volume was a 49.8 percent MoM and 132 percent YoY increase, representing market share of 6.7 percent.

The imported-car segment was reshuffled in October, because the German brand Mercedes-Benz yielded its long-term No. 1 position to Mazda. Mercedes-Benz ranked the No. 7 auto vendor by selling 1,808 units, down 1 percent MoM but up 6.4 percent YoY, with the other German brand BMW being the No. 8 with monthly volume of 1,569 units, up 3.4 percent MoM but down 3.7 percent YoY.

Sales of imported cars in Taiwan have been increasing in recent years, while the market share of imported models has steadily climbed to hit record highs of nearly 40 percent of the overall market. More and more international brands have succeeded to enter the top-5 auto-vendor ranking list, such as Mazda, Mercedes-Benz, BMW etc., outperforming auto brands with local production. CENS
