Norway's EV/PHEV Share of EV Market Leads: IHS Automotive

Compiled by QUINCY LIANG

In the first quarter of 2015, the Volkswagen e-Golf was the dominant model among consumers in Norway, whose market share of EV/PHEV registrations was the highest among eight industrially advanced nations, according to IHS Automotive. (photo from Internet)

Among major industrially advanced nations where consumers tend to pay more attention to environmental-protection issues, Norway continues to lead the global electric vehicle/plug-in hybrid vehicle (EV/PHEV) market, according to recent analysis by IHS Automotive, a global provider of critical information.

In the first quarter of 2015, Norway ranked first on the new IHS Automotive Plug-in Electric Vehicle Index, which ranks the market share of EV and PHEV registrations in a given quarter for eight countries, including Norway, Netherlands, the U.K., the U.S., France, Germany, Japan and China.

With EV/PHEVs representing one-third of new vehicles registered in Norway during the first quarter of this year, the country leads the first-quarter rankings with just over 8,000 units, and achieved a 41 percent increase in volume over the same period in 2014. No import taxes on EVs, among other incentives, have made these vehicles a viable alternative to internal combustion engine (ICE) vehicles in Norway. The Volkswagen e-Golf is the dominant model among local consumers during the first quarter, according to the analysis.

The Netherlands experienced the second-highest growth in EV share in the first quarter, with more than 5,700 units registered, representing 5.7 percent of the market during the quarter.

Volumes Remain Highest in U.S., China

The U.S. and China led all countries based on volumes of new EV/PHEVs registered during the quarter, with nearly 15,000 registrations in the U.S. and nearly 13,000 registrations in China.

“While the federal tax credit in the U.S. of up to US$7,500 for plug-in electric vehicles is continuing to encourage sales across the country, the adoption of these vehicles has been uneven, as consumer consideration and choice has skewed in favor of states offering additional incentives, like the Clean Vehicle Rebate Project in California or Georgia's Zero Emission Vehicle Tax Credit,” said Ben Scott, senior analyst at IHS Automotive. “In addition, low fuel pump prices are adversely influencing EV/PHEV purchases among U.S. consumers.” Another recent report says that some Americans, encouraged by lower gasoline prices, are opting to buy larger, less gas efficient vehicles as SUVs again.

The market share for EV/PHEVs in the U.S. remains low, with these vehicles accounting for just 0.8 percent of the market during the quarter, according to IHS. Based on volume, the most popular EV/PHEV in the U.S. is the Tesla Model S.

In China, government incentives help to support EV and PHEV ownership. Between the first quarter last year and the same timeframe this year, the number of EV/PHEV registrations in China rose by nearly 750 percent. However, these vehicles continue to represent a minimal percentage of the overall market in China – just 0.3 percent, indicating that further incentives may need to be considered to increase consumer acceptance. The most popular plug-in vehicle (PEV) in the first quarter, 2015 in China is the BYD Qin PHEV. The U.K. also had impressive growth of 392 percent for plug-in vehicles between the first quarter, 2014 and the first quarter, 2015.

Other countries do not offer the same advantages for consumers. As an example, Germany does not offer many appealing incentives for consumers to consider EV/PHEVs a compelling alternative to internal combustion vehicles. Although plug-in vehicle registrations in Germany increased by 98 percent between the first quarter of 2014 and first quarter of 2015, the increase comes from a low base.

Many of the plug-in vehicles registered in Germany during the timeframe were electrified variants on traditional ICE models. Popular vehicles include the Volkswagen Golf GTE PHEV and Audi A3 PHEV. Germany is considering further incentives on plug-in electric vehicles to support future adoption. Interestingly, France had similar growth to Germany over the same period, yet offers more incentives on plug-in electric vehicles. This is an example of incentives not having the desired effect to catalyze the uptake of these types of vehicle, IHS Automotive said.

Japan is the only country to have a negative year-over-year percentage change, the research unit said. This is likely due to some EV incentives ending between this period and Japanese consumer preference towards HEVs (hybrid electric vehicles without a plug) over PHEVs. CENS

Tesla's Rising Global Sales and Diversification to Benefit Taiwanese Parts Supply Chain

Compiled by QUINCY LIANG

Tesla sells 11,507 Model S premium electric cars worldwide in the second quarter this year. (photo from Tesla website)

Citing a Green Car Report of July 2, 2015, Tesla, the Silicon Valley premium electric carmaker, delivered 11,507 Model S luxury electric cars from April 1 through June 30. That is its highest quarterly total thus far, and brings Tesla's global deliveries for the first half of 2015 to 21,537 cars.

Such eye-catching sales by Tesla Motors Inc. and the firm's announcements to venture into the Chinese market and the launch of a new electric-car model in the third quarter, a group of key-parts suppliers to Tesla in Taiwan are expected to enjoy clear sales gains this year.

Tesla just announced 11,507 Model S deliveries for the second quarter of 2015. This was a new company record for the most cars delivered in a quarter and represents an approximate 52% increase over the same period last year. In the first six months, Tesla's accumulated sales were less than 40% of its targeted annual volume of 55,000 units. However, the American company is scheduled to launch the Model X electric SUV in the third quarter, which is expected to further upgrade global sales volume.

Local industry sources point out that initially Tesla was rebuffed by many international parts suppliers due to low order volume, forcing the maker to turn to Taiwanese suppliers, who are known for being willing to fill small, large-variety orders. In conjunction with the expanding sales volume, Tesla has been placing increasing orders to partners in Taiwan.

Tesla is scheduled to launch the Model X electric SUV in Q3, 2015. (photo from Tesla's website)

Taiwanese Supply Chain

A good example is Hota Industrial Manufacturing Co., Ltd., the sole supplier of speed-reduction gearboxes to Tesla. Thanks to doubled ordered volume from Tesla, Hota is expected to hit record earnings this year. Tesla was the third-largest customer to Hota in 2014, but has become the second-largest in conjunction with the increasing orders. Hota is optimistic toward business gain in the automotive industry over next three years, and has kicked off a plant expansion project in Taiwan.

K. S. Terminals Inc., a major automotive connector supplier in Taiwan, is scheduled to kick off shipments of electric vehicle (EV)-use connectors in third quarter.

BizLink Technology Inc., major connector and cable supplier, said that it expects to enjoy two-digit revenue growth this year, thanks to sales increase in energy, automotive etc. applications as well as the USB Type-C products.

Industry sources say that the electric car made by Tesla can have a cruise range of 270 miles per charge, comparing to less than 100 miles of general counterparts. The company's Model S can carry up to seven people including the driver, accelerate to 60 mile per hour from stop in five seconds, and is equipped with a 17-inch Internet-enabled touch-screen center console.

Elon Musk, CEO of Tesla, has also ventured into other related business. In May, he announced the entry into energy storage market, and plans to develop the EV battery technology for family, enterprise, public etc. applications. The CEO said demand for energy storage systems has been overwhelming, after 38,000 Powerwall, a Tesla-developed home battery pack, have been ordered since product announcement. According to a Forbes report of July 14, 2015, Tesla's chief technology officer J.B. Straubel is bullish on the rise of energy storage market, which isn't surprising for basing his prediction partly on Tesla's plan to build a large lithium-ion battery factory in Nevada that is scheduled to start churning out battery packs next year. The factory is designed to increase its production capacity to 50 gigawatts per hour annually by 2020, enough to run 500,000 Tesla cars. The downstream effect of such project could realize more orders for Tesla parts placed with Taiwanese suppliers. CENS

New Factory, Expanding Product Lines

Hwang Yu inaugurated a factory in early 2014, covering floor area of 2,700 sq.m. and with 12 production lines. The modern and integrated facility has upgraded the company's monthly production capacity to 900,000 pieces from 400,000, to drive the maker's plan to gradually expand product lines. By moving some of its established production lines to the new factory to add inventory space, Hwang Yu claims that the lead time of 80% to 90% of its existing items can be shortened to only 21 days, compared to the current 45 days.

To better meet global customers' requirement for one-stop-shopping, Hwang Yu has been aggressively developing new products. In conjunction with the continued expansion of its service team, the firm targets to offer the best-quality products and services, including sourcing. The firm is also scheduled to pass the Customs-Trade Partnership Against Terrorism (CTPA) certification in 2015, which is expected to further accelerate delivery to customers in North America.

Hwang Yu's management says it continues to restructure the firm to upgrade product quality, improve efficiency, and enhance service quality, aiming to offer "safe and reliable products as well as happiness to global customers and end users." (QL)

LONG TAI YU CO., LTD.

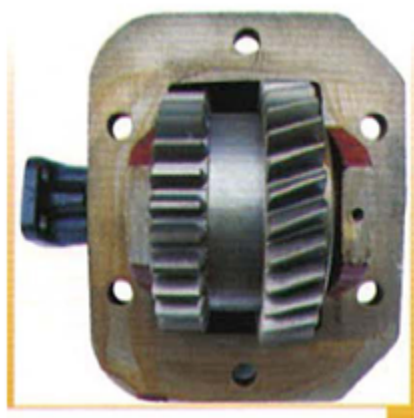

YIH FENG INDUSTRIAL CO., LTD.

Zhu Cheng Auto Parts & Accessories Corporation

PTO drive gearboxes and PTO drive shafts for dump trucks, crane trucks etc.

Power take-off or power takeoff (PTO) is any of several methods for tapping power from a power source, such as a running engine, and transmitting it to an application such as an attached mechanism or separate machine.

Typically it is a system comprising a PTO drive gearbox and an output shaft on a tractor or truck, designed so that a PTO shaft, a kind of drive shaft, can be easily connected and disconnected, and a corresponding input shaft on the application end. The PTO allows mechanisms to draw energy from an engine. Semi-permanently mounted PTOs can also be found on industrial and marine engines. These applications typically use a driveshaft and bolted joint to transmit power to a secondary implement or accessory.

Zhu Cheng's PTO drive gearbox for Isuzu makes and models

Founded in 2000, Zhu Cheng Auto Parts & Accessories Corporation is a seasoned, specialized maker of PTO drive gearboxes in Taiwan, with the biggest domestic PTO-gearbox market share for quite some time.

H.L. Dai, owner of Zhu Cheng, says his company has been specializing in designing, development and manufacturing PTO gearboxes and PTO drive shafts for especially 3.49-ton-plus Japanese trucks. In conjunction with aggressive and continuous investments in product development, Zhu Cheng offers dozens of PTO gearbox models for nameplates such as Hino, Fuso, Canter, UD, Isuzu etc. The firm's products are widely adopted by dump and crane trucks on the island.

Zhu Cheng's PTO gearboxes feature the highest quality and durability, which have been proven by users in Taiwan and other nations to have set nearly zero-defect record. Thanks to the adoption of high-precision gears meeting the JIS level-4 standard and with special treatments, the firm's PTO gearboxes perform well in different industries by offering excellent reliability and durable power output.

Another core competitiveness of Zhu Cheng's PTO gearboxes, according to Dai, is being 100% made-in-Taiwan. The firm designs and develops the PTO gearboxes with its own ideas and refers to similar products by leading vendors, also contracting a group of top suppliers to make the key parts for final in-house assembly. Such model, Dai says, secures the highest quality and durability level, as well as cuts costs in the fully-in-house production.

Symbol of Reliability

Zhu Cheng's products offer customers guaranteed safety and ease of use, Dai claims, while exacting inter-part fit assures machinery always work smoothly. As result, Dai says that customers using PTO gearboxes produced by Zhu Cheng have peace of mind that their vehicles, machinery will work safely and perform as intended.

After gaining solid foothold in Taiwan's PTO gearbox and PTO drive shaft market, Zhu Cheng began exporting quality products to overseas markets and have won high customer confirmation, especially in Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) and Latin America. The company is very confident of prospects to raise overseas sales and is ready to expand production lines anytime according to market demand.

Zhu Cheng welcomes inquiries for further company and product information, and promises prompt reply.
